AN EASY WAY

TO CUT PIPE REPLACEMENT COSTS

When pipe rusts or corrodes and fails, there's but one thing to do if operation is to continue—replace the failed pipe. And that costs money—even more than the original installation, because to the cost of material and installation labor must be added the cost of removing the old pipe.

Right there is a prime reason why you should select rust-resisting pipe for service under corrosive conditions—Toncan Copper Molybdenum Iron Pipe—the alloy of refined open hearth iron, copper and molybdenum with the maximum rust-resistance of any ferrous material in its price class.

For more than 27 years, this material has been resisting rust—has established remarkable service records—has demonstrated conclusively that it cuts pipe replacement costs in plumbing and heating lines.

If you would like to know more about this longer-lasting pipe, write for a copy of the booklet, "Pipe for Permanence."
